

Evidence Based Nursing: Associate Editor Vacancies

Evidence-Based Nursing is looking to appoint two new associate editors to join our team.

The journal serves to provide nurses, midwives and other healthcare practitioners with insights into the latest clinical and professional research. The journal commissions and publishes commentaries on recent literature, providing analysis and critique of methods, findings, and implication for practice and research. In addition, the journal stimulates discussion and supports learning through publication of editorials, review articles (such as 'research made simple' and nurse education summaries) and opinion pieces. Further information about the journal can be found on the Evidence-Based Nursing website.

Applications are welcomed from Registered Nurses (RNs) or Midwives from around the world and across all fields and specialities, but we particularly welcome applications from RNs with expertise in Mental Health and/or Intellectual Disabilities care. EBN is seeking to expand the diversity of our editorial team, and we encourage applications from eligible candidates from underrepresented groups.

Applicants should have a doctorate and significant research expertise, with a track record in publishing in a range of academic and professional journals. Applicants should ideally have an active and energetic social media presence.

Associate editors are expected to:

1. Identify at least four published articles per month (from database searches and other sources) that may be suitable for commissioned commentaries.
2. Review and make editorial recommendations regarding commentaries that are submitted for publication.
3. Actively promote engagement of journal readers using social media (e.g. disseminating journal content and news via Twitter)
4. Write and/or commission Evidence-Based Nursing blogs (approximately 4 per year)
5. Write and submit content for the journal, two or three times per year. This may include an editorial, a paper for the 'Research Made Simple' series, or an evidence summary.
6. Peer-review contributions of other associate editors (once or twice a year).
7. Provide the Editor-in-Chief with advice on the direction of the journal, and attend quarterly EBN editors' meetings (reasonable travel expenses are covered, when meetings are not held remotely).

A small honorarium is offered for this role (paid in two instalments at the end of June and end of December) to recognise your contribution to the journal.

If you are interested in this role please submit your CV and 500 words about what you would contribute to the journal to George Neame (gname@bmj.com) by Thursday 12th May 2022.
